Minister Shmatko calls for strengthened energy relations with Germany

Posted: 13 Dec 2011 04:38 PM PST

Russian Energy Minister Sergey Shmatko recently caused a stir in Europe by proposing to strengthen the energy relationship with Germany and invest billions of euros to become a major player in the country's energy market.

The idea has had a mixed reception, with critics expressing wariness at encouraging energy dependence on Russia and others hailing a good opportunity to shore up supply and encourage economic competition.

Promoting investment and business opportunities in Russia

Posted: 15 Dec 2011 01:38 PM PST

The speed and success with which Russia's economy has opened up can be gauged by the number of investment conferences in the country and the international community's interest in them. The first such event was held only 16 years ago and has mushroomed into an immeasurable number of forums. These investment conferences have become as diverse and competitive as Russia's economy itself – events with similar goals and audiences are vying with one another to prepare relevant agendas and attract high-profile speakers.
